PC-Ward is a lightweight utility for automatic monitoring and taking screenshots of applications. The program is able to protect its database and hide its interface. You can also set a maximum number of screenshots to grab and have them stored in one location. Moreover, you can also preview the photos before deleting them from the database. The program's interface is quite similar to the classic view, but the tool itself offers a few new features. PC-Ward has the ability to capture frames, which are automatically grabbed when the program starts up. As mentioned, you can also define how many frames you want to grab and decide whether to have them appear as a transition between the images, or to view them all at once. PC-Ward also has an option to protect the database. You can either choose to keep it password protected, or to hide its location from other users. When the database is protected, you can also specify a maximum screenshot size and have it saved to your Pictures folder. PC-Ward also has a few other options, such as the ability to set the capture delay. You can choose to either capture the first frame after the application starts, or just the first 20 seconds. Another option that is available is to show the program's interface in stealth mode. This will make the program completely invisible, and it will still work as normal.
